Consejos Para Padres ~ Parenting Tips

Some parents had the luxury of growing up in bilingual households and learning two languages from an early age. For these parents it can be a struggle to maintain the minority language, or the language that is other than English for those of us here in California. Other factors arise for parents that are not quite fluent in the minority language. Perhaps they studied a couple or several years of the language in high school or college. Perhaps they grew up with some family members speaking the language and do have a rudimentary understanding of the language but are unable to fluently produce the language. The strategies listed below are for those parents.

To improve your own personal language skills:

1. Use technology. Software, apps, games. The Rosetta Stone software, although expensive, works pretty well if you have the time to use it. The military kept up their contract for many years because it's so good.

2. High interest reading material. Pick up some magazines, in paper or on your device to practice words in categories that already have your interest perhaps cooking and housekeeping or cars or science.
3. Listen to music in the target language. The radio is a great place to hear authentic conversation on local topics of interest. Plenty of internet radio stations also are culture or language specific.
